Megharryccino anyone? Bakery serves up royal wedding coffees

Coffee fans can celebrate the upcoming royal wedding of Prince Harry to actress Meghan Markle by sipping a special type of hot drink - the "Megharryccino". A bakery in the picturesque town of Windsor, where Britain's sixth-in-line to the throne will marry his American fiancée on Saturday, is serving up cappuccino and latte coffees topped with a frothy portrait of the couple. Surrounded by Union Jack bunting and a large cut-out of the pair, baristas at Heidi's bakery use a special machine to reproduce an image of one of Harry and Markle's engagement pictures onto the froth with coffee.

Priced at 4.50 pounds ($6), the drinks, which Heidi bakery co-owner of Edward Durkin described as "unique", are more expensive than usual coffees but were proving popular yesterday morning with a steady stream of customers ordering them.

"I'm afraid to spoil it," customer Ann Brooker, 78, said, hesitant to drink her coffee at first before tucking in.

Corbyn to miss wedding

● Britain's opposition leader Jeremy Corbyn, a long-time critic of the royal family, will be busy attending engagements and conferences during Saturday's wedding of Prince Harry and Meghan Markle, his spokesman said. Corbyn wished the couple well during a question and answer session in parliament, and praised Harry's charity work on raising mental health awareness.

Starring role

● Britain's Prince Harry and his U.S. fiancée Meghan Markle have chosen George and Charlotte, the children of the royal's elder brother Prince William, to be among the bridesmaids and page boys for their wedding, his office said.

Dad not attending

● The father of American actress Meghan Markle said he could not attend his daughter's wedding to Britain's Prince Harry on Saturday because he needed a heart procedure.
