A WARMER AUTUMN

London.—Above average temperatures are set to continue in almost all of Europe during the October to December period, forecasts by The Weather Company showed yesterday.

“The extreme warmth and dryness observed across much of Europe over the past 5 months has been extraordinary, and there is no clear evidence for any significant pattern change towards below-normal temperatures anytime soon,” said Todd Crawford, chief meteorologist with The Weather Company.

The warmer than usual temperatures are likely to continue for the next few months, according to climate model and analogue forecasts, Crawford said.

“However, there is some pretty compelling evidence to suggest that a transition to a much colder period is possible, especially later in the winter.”

The Weather Company, owned by IBM, provides weather forecasts aimed at the commodities and energy sectors.

EU pushes for October Brexit agreement, but threatens no deal

European Union leaders will push for a Brexit deal next month but warned British Prime Minister Theresa May yesterday that if she won't give ground on trade and the Irish border by November they are ready to cope with talks collapsing.

“Don't worry, be happy,” joked EU chief executive Jean-Claude Juncker after telling reporters at a summit in Austria that the Europeans had full plans in place in the event there was no deal before Britain leaves next March. See Inside
